A practice shaped by landscape

Between object, sculpture and architecture.

Jan Ernst is a Cape Town-based multidisciplinary artist and designer whose practice moves between collectible design, sculpture and architecture. Trained as an architect, he approaches each object as a study in form, space and material presence.

From the studio in Woodstock, works are developed by hand across clay, plaster, glass and bronze. The process is slow and exploratory: forms emerge through making, carrying traces of touch, irregularity and the quiet intelligence of natural structures.

The resulting pieces are functional yet sculptural - objects intended to gather people, hold light and create conversation.
